Event Overview

The Great Reno Balloon Race is the largest free hot-air balloon event in the world, but that's not the only thing that makes it special. Since its humble beginnings in 1982, this event has been near and dear to the community and the region. Children who attended the event in those early days now have children of their own they bring to the event, some even bring grandchildren. It's a staple for anyone growing up within a hundred miles, and people across the globe are drawn to it year after year.

The event has grown dramatically in size from just 20 hot-air balloons in 1982 to upwards of 100 colored masterpieces taking to the sky, including a variety of special shapes. With an average of 125,000 people attending the event each year, the number of lives touched by the beautiful spectacle continues to rise just like the balloons themselves.

On the ground, spectators—some clad in pajamas—sit atop blankets or folding chairs gripping hot beverages or mimosas and gaze into the early morning sky for the ethereal Glow Show that takes place before the sun even peeks above the horizon. Following that, some hot-air balloons launch for Dawn Patrol, the rest rise later at Mass Ascension, and a select group begins the competition portion of the eponymous race, while tens of thousands of visitors look on in awe, patronize vendors, and take tethered rides in the balloons that aren't gunning for the win.

This family-friendly event spills into the skies in the early morning and brings a smile to every face in the valley. Now in its 39th year, The Great Reno Balloon Race is nothing short of tradition—and with 100 percent of visitors surveyed reporting that they would recommend the event to friends and 98 percent planning to return, the tradition will only continue to grow.
